

Dr Matthew Rhodes graduated from the University of Houston, College of Optometry in 2008. He completed an optometry residency program in Primary Care and Low Vision Rehabilitation at the Tucson VA Medical Center. Subsequently, he became the first optometrist to complete a one year VA TBI/polytrauma inter-professional clinical optometry fellowship program at the Tampa VA Hospital, a level one polytrauma rehabilitation center. Since his post-graduate training, he has served as a staff optometrist at the Casa Grande VA Community-Based Outpatient Clinic in Casa Grande, Arizona.

Dr. Rhodes holds a faculty appointment at the University of California Berkeley, School of Optometry. He became a fellow of the American Academy of Optometry in 2011, and passed the NBEO-administered Advanced Competency in Medical Optometry exam in 2015. He is a contributing author to the American Optometric Association's Brain Injury Electronic Resource Manual (Volume 1A and Volume 1B).

Dr Rhodes loves warm weather and spending time with his wife and four young children in sunny AZ.
